WILDEST OF APACHES.

"Massai then became a problem to successive chiefs of scouts, a bugbear to the reservation Indians, and a terror to Arizona. If a man was killed or a woman missed, the Indians came galloping, and the scouts lay on his trail. If he met a woman in the defiles, he stretched her dead if she did not please his errand fancy. He took pot shots at men ploughing in their little fields, and knocked the Mexican bull drivers on the head as they plodded through the blinding dust of the Globe Road. He sat even like a vulture on the rock and signalled the Indians to come out and talk. When two Indians thus accosted did go out, they found them selves looking down Massai's 10-calibre, and were tempted to do his bidding. He sent one in for sugar and coffee, holding the brother, for such he happened to be, as a hostage till the sugar and coffee came. Then told them he was going behind a rock to lie down, cautioning them not to move for an hour. That was an unnecessary bluff for they did not wink an eye until sundown. Later than this he stole a girl in broad daylight in the face of a San Carlos camp and dragged her up the rocks. Here he was attacked by 15 or 20 bucks, whom he stood off until darkness. When they reached his lair in the morning, there lay the dead girl, but Massai was gone.

"I never saw Massai but once, and then it was only a piece of his G string flickering in the brush. We had followed his trail half the night, and just at daylight, as we ascended a steep part of the mountains I caught a sight of a pony's head looking over a bush. We advanced rapidly, only to find the horse grunting from a stab wound in the belly, and the little camp scattered around about him. The shirt tail flicker in the brush was all of Massai. We followed on, but he had gone down a steep bluff. We went down too, thus exposing ourselves to draw his fire so that we could locate him, but he was not tempted.

"The late Lieutenant Clark had much the same view of this mountain outlaw, and since those days a young man of the Seventh Cavalry, Rice and Averil, have on separate occasions crawled on his camp at the break of day, only to see Massai go out of sight in the bush like a blue quail.

"Lieutenant Averil, after a forced march of 80 miles, reached a bottle camp near morning, after climbing his detachment since midnight up the almost inaccessible rocks, in hope of surprising the camp. He divided his force into three parties, and tried, as well as possible, to close every avenue of escape, but as the camp was on the high rocky hill at the junction of four deep canyons, his men were forced to approach, running like deer, and making for the canyons. The soldiers fired, killing a buck and accidentally wounding a squaw, but Massai simply disappeared.

"That's the story of Massai. It is not as long as his trail," said the chief of scouts—Frederic Remington in Harper's Magazine.

THE PROTECTED BOSTONIAN.

An Imaginary Bostonian, on rising in Woburn in the Atlantic, finds his whole toilet, his breakfast, and breakfast service under government supervision.

Not so this average Bostonian and his family escape from public control upon rising from the table. The children are by law compelled to go to school; and though there is an option to attend a private school, the day gratuitously furnishes a school and school books. As for the father himself, when he reaches the door, he finds that public servants are girding his trousers with buttons, and are girding much. Without stopping to reflect that he has not been asked to permit these public servants to go upon his property, he steps out upon a sidewalk constructed in accordance with public requirements, crosses the street paved and watered and swept by the public, and enters a street car whose route, speed and fare are regulated by the public. Reaching the center of the city, he ascends to his office by an elevator subject to public inspection, and reads the mail that has been brought to him from all parts of the now he leaves his office and goes to some store or factor in which he owns an interest, he finds that for female employees chairs must be provided, that children must not be employed in certain kinds of work, that dangerous machinery must be fenced, that fire escapes must be furnished, and probably that the goods produced or sold must be marked or packed in a certain way, or must reach a certain business man by, it is almost certain that in one way or another the public hand comes between him and his employees, or between him and his customer.

WHEN PHILADELPHIA WAS GREAT. In 1774 Philadelphia was the largest town in the American colonies. Estimates of the population, which are all we have, differ widely, but it was probably not far from 20,000. A single city now has a larger population than all the colonies possessed in 1774, and there are in the United States today 101 cities and towns of 30,000 and over. Figures alone, however, cannot express the difference between those days and our own. Now a town of 30,000 people is reached by railroads and telegraphs. It is in close touch with all the rest of the world. Business brings strangers to it constantly, who come like shadows, and so depart, unnoticed, except by those with whom they are immediately concerned.

It was not so in 1774, not even in Philadelphia, which was as nearly as possible the central point of the colonies as well as the most populous city. Thanks to the energy and genius of Franklin, Philadelphia was paved, lighted and ordered in a way almost unknown in any other town of that period. It was well built and thriving. Business was active and the people were thrifty and prosperous and lived well. Yet, despite all these good qualities, we must make an effort of the imagination to realize how quietly and slowly life moved then in comparison to the pace of today. There in Philadelphia was the center of the postal system of the continent, and the recently established mail coach called the "Flynn Machine," not in jest but in praise, performed the journey to New York in the shortest unqualified time of two days. Another mail at longer intervals crept more slowly to the south. Vessels of the coast wise traffic, or from beyond the seas, came into port at uncertain times, and after long and still more uncertain voyages. The daily round of life was so regular and so quiet that the incident or any novelty drew interest and attention in a way which would now be impossible—Senator Henry Cabot Lodge in Scribner's.

USE OF FORMS.

"All ceremonies which have a meaning are justified, if the meanings worth expression," says the Christian Register (Unit.) of Boston. "Our daily conduct in relations with our fellows is almost wholly by ceremony. When two men meet, they at once declare their attitudes regarding one another by the attitudes they take, the motions they make, by the movements of their features and the forms of speech they use. If all civilized men had agreed that putting one's hand behind his back would be a symbol of welcome, it would be the sign of hostility to thrust one's hand forward. Naturally the withdrawal of the hand would seem to be expressive of an intention not to strike, and so might have become the sign of friendship. Custom has made the opposite signal a token of good will. There is scarcely a movement of features or limbs, or a form of words, which does not have some such conventional interpretation. He therefore, who would be understood will use such signs of purpose after the manner of those who designed them, and who principally use them. To use phrases, forms, ceremonies, and creeds in one sense, knowing that they who see and hear take them in another sense, is the most common and one of the most useful forms of misinterpretation. But to use them because they have come to express something worth communicating, which one desires to communicate to others, is simply to fall in with the habits of civilized people everywhere."

OF POPE LEO.

"We Protestants, who recognize no papal authority, and to whom, without education and principles, it would be almost sacrilegious to put any living man in authority as the viceregent of Jesus Christ where he could authoritatively define new dogmas of Christian faith, may yet properly recognize," says the New York Independent, "in Leo XIII. one who has given to his office its best fulfillment. His greatest claim to honor, perhaps, apart from his general character and liberal temper, appears in his attitude to popular government. He has discouraged and to the extent of his power has supported the republic of France, which assumes to speak at the same time for the divine right of kings and the Catholic church. He has told the world that a new French republic has as much right before God to exist as an old monarchy; for government by the people is as legitimate and Christian as government by a king. This position he has brought him into sympathy with the American republic; and we may say that the prosperity and freedom of the Catholic church under the republican government has had much to do with his direction to French Catholics to support the French republic. The same spirit has led him to a much harder decision, that to relax the order forbidding Italian Catholics to vote under a government which has taken possession of the states of the church. The same spirit has led him to sympathize with the laboring class, and to make it more evident than ever that the Christian church is for the people and not for the rulers only."

SCOPE OF MINISTERS.

"May a minister belong to two denominations at once?" asks the New York Outlook. "Why not?" The question is prompted by the report in the Herald of Gospel Liberty that two ministers of the Christian denomination have been dropped from their pulpits by a very heavy vote on account of belonging to the Congregational body. This seems questionable while negotiations are in progress for a union of those two denominations. Custom and precedent must render a reason. Are our church denominations competitive? Then there is no belonging to more than one at a time. Are they rather cooperative? Then why not belong to more than one at a time? Indeed, why belong to one rather than another? The best reason for this is that through some one denomination, one being what he is, can best promote Christian interests. The denomination is simply a means to that end. So viewing it, one may ask: Why be restricted to a single means? Of course objections arise in the interest of maintaining certain forms of doctrine or of endeavor which denominations are organized. But why should not heralds of Gospel Liberty be somewhat free in such matters—go in and go out and find pasture, just as some ministers hold the doctor's degree from more than one college?"

Notice of Latest Inventions.

FOLDING UMBRELLA.

A recently patented folding umbrella has the tip and handle fitted with screw sockets, so they can be removed for packing the umbrella in a trunk.

PLIERS AS WELL AS WRENCH.

In a newly patented pair of pliers the jaws are semicircular and having notches cut at intervals to fit different sizes nuts, so the pliers can be used as a wrench.

INSTEAD OF TOE CLIPS.

For use instead of toe clips on a bicycle a plate is attached to the shoe having a recess in which a projection on the pedal fits to hold the rider's foot in place.

CRAYON HOLDERS.

To hold crayons for blackboard or drawing work a tube is fitted with clamping jaws at one end and a sliding rod at the other end, to force the chalk into position.

POINTLESS DRAFTING COMPASSES.

Drafting compasses are being made with a flexible rubber suction cup on one end to fasten to the paper and hold the instrument while the circle is being drawn.

PNEUMATIC DOOR BELL.

New doorbell, the pushbutton pumping air into a tube, which has a piston at the other end to slide out and push the bell clapper.

HINGED CRUTCHES.

Crutches are now being made with a hinge in the center, fitted with a socket joint, so they can be folded up when not in use, thus occupying half the space of the ordinary kind.

GARMENT HANGERS.

A handy garment hanger which can be attached to any collar has a chain in the center with a spiral spring on either side and pins at each end by which it is fastened to the garment.

INVISIBLE CUSPIDORS.

Cuspidors for railroads and street car use are mounted on sliding frames and placed in compartments under the seats, to be pushed into position for use by touching a lever with the foot.

AUTOMATIC OILER.

The bearings of reciprocating machinery can be automatically oiled by a new oil cup, which has a pendulum inside the cup to move with the cup and alternately open and close a small aperture through which oil flows to the bearing.

PNEUMATIC MATTRESS.

In a recently patented bed for invalids the mattress is formed of a series of separate apartments, which can be inflated separately or simultaneously to the desired hardness, thus permitting the raising or lowering of any section to fit the patient's body.

LADIES' HAT HOLDER.

Ladies' hats can be suspended from a nail without danger of slipping off by a new device, comprising a wire clamp set inside the hat, with a spring to hold it in a closed position, one end being pulled outward to attach it to the nail.

ICE CREEPER.

A combined detachable ice creeper and heel plate is being manufactured, which has spring clips by which it is attached to the heel, a roughened rubber or metal plate fitting the under side of the heel when in use to prevent slipping on the ice.

TIRES FOR WAGONS.

Pneumatic tires for wagons and bicycles are moulded with a flat tread attached to and extending on each side of the face of the tire, the interior of which contains a shield of metal discs, to prevent puncturing.

NON-CAPSIZING BOAT.

Safety boats for pleasure or life saving purposes are prevented from capsizing by a number of air receptacles and cork floats arranged at each end of the boat, the compartments being placed at such a height as to descend below the water when the boat tips, and throw it back to an upright position.

NEW MILK CAN.

A new milk can for retail dealers' use has a recess in the center of the bottom, into which the dipper exactly fits, to force the milk out and cause it to drain into the dipper to empty the can without tipping it.

CARPET STRETCHER.

To assist in laying carpets a new stretcher is formed of a rod with a tack slot on one side and a plunger, which drives the tack after the teeth of the stretcher have gripped the edge of the carpet and forced it into position.

PIANO STOOL FOR TWO.

Piano stools for the use of either one or two players are fitted with hinged side pieces upholstered like the seat and hanging down when not in use, spring actuated rods sliding into the main seat to support them in a horizontal position for use.

HAT PIN.

A recently designed hat pin is split at the ends with the sections bent outward and then inward across each other, ending in a knob or head, the sections being forced together as the pin is pushed in and opening inside the hat as soon as the crossed portion is reached to prevent the pin from slipping out until released by turning the head.

GLOVE FOR ANY HAND.

A New York firm has patented a glove with elastic webbing in the sides of the fingers and thumb to stretch as the glove is pulled on, thus making it fit any size hand.

HANDLING HOT PLATES.

Hot plates can be lifted by a new utensil without danger of burning the hands, two wire frames being attached to a handle, with one frame sliding in a socket, to fit different size plates.

QUILTING MACHINE IMPROVEMENT.

For use on quilting machines or in sewing a number of parallel seams, an improved arm has a number of needles set in an arc, with one shuttle reciprocated below to lock the threads of all the needles.

CREEPERS FOR HORSES.

To keep horses from slipping on icy pavements a new device is made of a steel frame in two sections, with a screw to clamp it over a horseshoe, the under side of the frame being fitted with sharp calks.

ELECTRIC ORGAN.

Electricity is used to operate a newly designed pipe organ, the keys closing circuits which operate magnetic coils to control the air valves, and the stops being operated by switches arranged above the keyboard.

designed pipe organ, the keys closing circuits which operate magnetic coils to control the air valves, and the stops being operated by switches arranged above the keyboard.

NEW RULING PEN.

A new ruling pen has a sliding pin set in the side of the holder to drop down on a level with the pen and slide along the ruler, instead of pressing the ruler against it, thus preventing the ruler from blotting the paper.

ELECTRIC TOOTHACHE CURE.

Toothache is to be cured by a new instrument, consisting of silver and zinc strips of metal, hinged at one end, one strip to rest on the tooth and the other on the gum, forming a metallic circuit to act on the nerve.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup.
